For the second night in a row, an unknown player made their first WSOP cash count by upsetting an established pro to take home the coveted gold bracelet. Yesterday, Levi Berger played David to two-time bracelet winner Scott Clements' Goliath. Today, it was Lev Rofman throwing the stones at poker giant and five-time bracelet winner Allen Cunningham.

The Moscow born Rofman defeated Cunningham heads-up at the final table of the $1,500 Pot Limit Hold'em Event 12 to earn the bracelet in addition to a $166,136. After coming into the final table in the middle of the chip counts, Rofman managed to chip up, survive, and get it down to heads-up play against one of the most accomplished players in the game.

Even though Cunningham had experience on his side, Rofman managed to throw enough punches to win the bout and the event, while Cunningham settled for second place and $102,189. This was Cunningham's best WSOP showing since he won his fifth bracelet in 2007 and his first WSOP final table appearance since 2008.
