Last year, many people suggested it was a Year of the Woman. This year may not be the Year of the Women, but we'll tell you one thing—it is certainly the Year of Loni Harwood.

The 23-year-old New Yorker's performance at the 2013 WSOP is arguably the most impressive one a woman has posted in WSOP history. Making three final tables in a single summer is a rarely seen feat for a woman. Doing that and winning a bracelet is unprecedented—until today.

Harwood defeated a field of more than 2,500 in the final $1,500 No Limit Hold'em event of the summer to win over $600,000 and cement her name in the WSOP record books. The payday surpasses Allyn Jaffrey Shulman's Seniors Event victory last year as the largest sum ever awarded to a woman in a Las Vegas WSOP event and trails only Annette Obrestad's WSOPE Main Event win in 2007 as the biggest payday for a woman in WSOP history.

It also skyrockets Harwood, who had zero dollars in WSOP cashes just three weeks ago, to eighth on the all-time WSOP money list for women with $874,698—the most a woman has ever earned at a single WSOP.
