Cincinnati, OH (September 24, 2013) — The 2013/2014 WSOP Circuit at Horseshoe Casino Cincinnati began last Thursday, but didn't truly kick off until the first of three starting flights in the $365 re-entry event got underway Friday. The series' premiere tournament drew 1,106 entries over the course of opening weekend, setting the attendance bar for all future poker series in Ohio.

It took five days, but when the dust settled, 36-year-old Ohio resident Jason Hill was in the winner's circle. Hill earned $60,554, his first WSOP Circuit gold ring and a place in the poker record books for his hard work.

"It feels pretty spectacular to be a part of history," Hill said. "This is my first WSOP win and this is the most money I've won."

In addition to serving as Ohio's first-ever tournament series, the WSOP Circuit at Horseshoe Cincinnati serves as a way to showcase the six-month-old property to many of the Midwest's best poker players. Doors opened for the 12-day series five days ago and players have been raving about the facility ever since.

"It's one of the nicest stops I've been to. The property is beautiful and I like everything about it so far," said gold ring winner and Las Vegas resident Rex Clinkscales.

Circuit regular and two-time WSOP Circuit gold ring winner Aaron Massey made the short trip from his hometown of Chicago and shared Clinkscales' sentiment.

"I think the property itself is one of the nicest casinos in the Midwest if not in the country," Massey said.

While Hill's opinion may be biased, he further echoed those feelings following his $60,000 score Tuesday.

"In relation to other properties in the area, I like this one. I thought [the tournament] was ran very well. It kind of reminds of the [WSOP] at the Rio," Hill said.
