The name Brandon Shack-Harris may not be a name you recognize, but if the rail for his bracelet win in the $1,000 Pot Limit Omaha event is any indication, he runs with an elite group of poker players. The Chicago, Illinois native who sharpened his poker chops in the cash games at Horseshoe Hammond had the likes of Chance Kornuth, Scott Seiver, and even Vanessa Selbst checking in on his progress at the final table today.

“My strategy was to play my best, and get lucky when it mattered, and have chips when I got unlucky, and that’s exactly what happened,” Shack-Harris said afterward. “I was really surprised at the quality of players who played in this event, so to win it is great.”
