Eight-handed No Limit Hold'em offers the players a little more leg room, a slower structure and a lot more play. It has just proved it deserves to stay here at the World Series of Poker by producing one of the best No Limit Hold'em final tables of the summer. The player's at this final table had a combined 21 WSOP final tables and three bracelets coming into today's play. The two previous bracelet holders at the final table ended up squaring off heads-up for the gold. Josh Arieh had his sights set on his third bracelet, while Brian Yoon was looking for his second.

Yoon was able defeat Arieh in a quick heads-up battle that only lasted 19 hands to win his second bracelet and become the third 2013 bracelet winner to also win one in 2014, not to mention the 12th repeat bracelet winner of 2014. Last year Yoon won the Little One for One Drop event, defeating a 4,756 player field to take home more than $660,000. This time Yoon will take home $663,341 by defeating a pro heavy field of 550 players. This victory has pushed Yoon's WSOP earning over the $1 million mark and close to $1.5 million.
