Hugo Pingray won a monster-sized victory at the 2014 World Series of Poker. He was crowned the champion of the inaugural $1,500 buy-in No-Limit Hold'em Monster Stack tournament. The aspiring poker player and student on leave from his studies originally from France and now residing in Martigny, Switzerland topped a record-breaking field of 7,862 players on the way to not only his first cash ever at the WSOP, but his first major poker victory as well.

Pingray's cash prize amounted to $1,327,083. Put another way, this figure represented 885 times the buy-in for this event. Up until this win, in four live tournament cashes, all in Europe, his career earnings totaled a modest $45,631. Hence, this was an astonishing success story for a player who has been playing poker for only about three years.
