Winning a gold bracelet at the World Series of Poker is supposed to be difficult. It's a crowning achievement that often comes with an exhaustive collapse over the finish line.

In one of the quickest Seven-Card Stud final tables in memory, the Upstate New York poker pro had everything go his way from start to finish, in what ended up as his second WSOP victory.

Deeb won the $1,500 buy-in Seven-Card Stud tournament, which was played over three days and nights and concluded at the Rio in Las Vegas. Deeb collected $111,101 in prize money, which is but one of several six-figure wins of his career, or in other words . about what he makes in a typical
