JAROD MINGHINI WINS FIRST RING IN PLO EVENT

Retired pro snowboarder turns to poker and wins first Circuit ring at Thunder Valley

Jarod Minghini retired from professional snowboarding in 2017 and has been getting into poker in the process. He was a member of the U.S. snowboard team and competed in Bordercross. The Tahoe native scooped the Pot Limit Omaha ring event for $9,180, earning his first Circuit ring in the process.

Minghini is predominantly a cash game player, and decided to give this mixed game tournament a try after having no luck playing No-Limit Hold'em that day. "I've mainly played no-limit tournaments. This is only my third PLO tournament ever. I was short the whole tournament. I've been wanting a ring, it feels so awesome." The newly crowned champion is looking to get into more mixed games, but for now he's going to play the rest of the events this week in hopes of being contention for Casino Champion.
