In one of his last events before an extended hiatus from the Circuit, Martin Ryan scores his seventh ring and $19,323.

Two years ago, Martin Ryan won his first-ever World Series of Poker Circuit ring at an international stop in St. Maarten. It was a $365 pot-limit Omaha event. He won two rings at that stop. It was the start of an all-out assault on the Circuit leaderboards.

A day after his two-year anniversary of his first ring in St. Maarten, the Trinidad and Tobago native won his seventh ring in the $600 no-limit Hold'em event. With 134 entries and Walter Rodriguez heads-up to earn $19,323.

Over the last two years, Ryan cemented himself as a true end boss on the Circuit. He won rings in buy-ins varying between $365 and scored cashes all over the country. Aside from the two titles he won in St. Maarten, he won rings in Florida, Los Angeles and now Oklahoma. You could find him anywhere.

Ryan was diagnosed with a bad case of diabetes during a Circuit stop in Council Bluffs last spring. The doctors were close to amputating his leg from the knee down, but ended up only amputating a toe.

Two months ago in Florida, when he won his sixth ring, he was walking around in an air cast on his foot in order to relieve some of the pain and help him walk. Since then nothing has changed health wise.

He is currently in Miami after he leaves Oklahoma to have his foot checked out. If all goes well, he might make one more stop before he heads back to Trinidad for the foreseeable future.
