Nuclear physicist and amateur poker player wins his first live tournament in New Orleans

Aaron McEvoy was all smiles at the end of the opening event in New Orleans, earning his first ever World Series of Poker Circuit ring and $23,198 for his second-biggest career cash. The nuclear physicist moved to Austin, Texas for his girlfriend's job and has had some extra time on his hands. McEvoy has been playing the Circuit and a the WSOP in Vegas.

When asked how his first win feels McEvoy said, "pretty much incredible. I can't really believe it at this point, but it'll become real tomorrow I think." The 35-year-old has been playing since he was in college, and became hooked after "playing with the guys in the dorm rooms." McEvoy only planned to play the first couple of events, but is off to a hot start and might extend his trip.
